So, as you heard, in a humble word I will give my review on Photoshop. In short, I am a cat person. Always wanted to be a cat (not just editing cats). And I can say that this software is a desert. I mean, the basic tools are not basic, but the users don't spend so much time and energy to produce something. When I say basic tools, you know what I mean. If somebody thinks that we all are able to do something but he lost its position and doesn't have to think, it's a punishment. Photoshop has such directions. That's one of the most annoying things. I am a photographer, I am not a software developer. But for such a software as Photoshop, I need to be a developer, because it is a picture editor. After I added a layer, I needed to upload it. I want the image to be resized to some px/dp value. In such a small task I need to understand two things: data type and pixel count. But it's a short learning curve. The learning curve is inside Photoshop. And you have to be in it for it. Not only Photoshop is not a picture editor, but it's a beautiful picture editor. It's like a real world. I mean, not only a canvas and a picture, but other tools as well. It's a picture editing tool. The software is really addictive. You create a new layer and work with it. Then you want to add a new layer. You can't apply any changes on it until you change the name. And set the new layer's opacity, lock it and change some settings. It's so simple. You can also apply some color changes, just like on a real canvas. And you face such a problem. You have to export your picture. Photoshop doesn't have an option to export it, so you have to open PS and Export it to image format. And that slows down image editing so much. You have to do it especially you feel you are ready to check it.

What if I told you that you could just add color and figure out how they worked on their own - without trying to understand color theory?
